A Water Paradise Bearing Wonder upon Wonder The birthplace of nature conservation efforts in Japan

Oze is located right in the heart of the Japanese archipelago, at the intersection of the four prefectures of Fukushima, Tochigi, Gunma, and Niigata. Japan's largest mountaintop wetland, the Ozegahara Marsh and Lake Ozenuma, are surrounded by 2,000-meter-high mountains including Mt. Hiuchi and Mt. Shibutsu. The beauty of the landscape here is immortalized in the classic 1949 song "Natsu no Omoide," which describes the fantastical scenery as being "like a dream."

At the foot of the Oze area are the villages of Hinoemata, Fukushima and Yunotani, Niigata (part of present-day Uonuma City), which are counted among the top 10 areas of heavy snowfall worldwide. Behind these villages lies Oze, which is widely considered one of the world's leading snow regions. This abundance of snow creates a unique natural environment. In particular, the wetlands which stretch across the mountaintops are a rare occurrence worldwide. It is easy to imagine the Japanese people of yore, following a trackless path and having toiled to reach these summits, seeing this land as a kind of Eden.

With a history of overcoming many issues through the cooperation of citizens and government, Oze is also known as the birthplace of nature conservation efforts in Japan. From dam development during times of conflict and sightseeing road development during the economic boom of the postwar period, to overuse in recent years, these are just some of the many issues overcome through the cooperation of citizens and government.
